Organic Vidalia onions on the way from Morning Kiss Organic

March 26, 2019

Morning Kiss Organic is looking forward to bringing a healthy crop of organic Vidalia onions to market this spring. A variety of sweet onion produced in Georgia, Vidalia's are excellent when thinly sliced and served in salads or on top of sandwiches. As spring arrives, retailers should expect that consumers will aim to eat healthy, including fresh and organic fruits and vegetables.

During the 2019 produce season, Morning Kiss Organic will again partner with Generation Farms to source Vidalia onions. Located in Lake Park, GA, the Stanley family has been operating Generation Farms since 1945. The farm has developed several innovative processes to responsibly produce the best quality onions, including growing operations designed around groundwater conservation, groundwater management and overall carbon footprint reduction.

"This year's crop looks great. We are looking forward to seeing our organic crop ready towards the end of April or early May. For the second year, we are excited to offer a complete organic onion program with red, white, yellow and sweet organic onions," said Lauren Dees of Generation Farms.

"We're excited to continue our partnership with Generation Farms, a relationship which in fact has now lasted over a generation," said Mike Guptill of Morning Kiss Organic. "Their commitment to organic farming and top quality produce is exemplary."

All produce is packed fresh to order with daily deliveries, and Morning Kiss Organic offers highly customized retail programs to meet the needs of each individual retailer.
