Chronic non-communicable diseases (NCDs), primarily cardiovascular diseases, cancers, chronic respiratory diseases, diabetes and obesity, account for approximately 75 percent of all deaths globally and diminish the quality of life for millions. Over 2.1 billion children under the age of 20 are currently affected by NCDs or exposed to their major risk factors. Furthermore, 391 million children aged 5 to 19 years are living with overweight and obesity, a staggering figure that has tripled over the last 25 years.

JJB Family Farms expects record Modi apple crop in 2026

By

Keith Loria

July 17, 2026

The Apple Everyone Loves.

After several years of building awareness around the Modi apple, JJB Family Farms is poised for its biggest season yet. Strong growing conditions, an early harvest and significantly higher production have the Stockton, CA-based grower anticipating a breakout year for its signature apple variety.

The company expects to harvest approximately 5.4 million pounds of Modi apples this season — roughly double last year's crop — providing expanded opportunities for retailers, schools and export markets.

In the Trenches: Consumer price fatigue in an emotional inflationary economy

By

Ron Pelger

July 17, 2026

There was a time when consumers chose a grocery store based on the produce department, product quality and cleanliness. We'd like to think those reasons are still used today, but who are we kidding?

The true reason shoppers select a supermarket is price.

Shoppers constantly say they are forced to cut back spending on fresh fruits and vegetables because of higher prices.

So, what role does inflation play with consumers and growers regarding budgeting? Let's look at the core drivers of inflation and what the industry can expect:

Strong fall berry crop in the works for North Bay Produce

By

Chris Koger

July 17, 2026

An early harvest and favorable growing conditions for Michigan blueberries has North Bay Produce positioned to provide customers with fresh blueberries from the state throughout the season.

“The summer berry season is off to a strong start, with Michigan blueberries trending earlier than normal this year,” said Ryan Lockman, vice president of sales and procurement at Traverse City, MI-based North Bay. “Harvest began around June 25 in our southern growing regions, and we are seeing a good-quality crop with solid volume.”
