New York produce industry builds on relationships, resilience and regional strength

By

Keith Loria

June 18, 2026

New York's produce industry enters the second half of 2026 facing many of the same challenges affecting the rest of the country - weather volatility, inflationary pressures and rising transportation costs.

Yet the state continues to benefit from a unique combination of agricultural diversity, a strong wholesale infrastructure and a deep network of growers, distributors and marketers that have helped keep fresh produce moving throughout the Northeast.

The lettuce market remains one of the most challenging supply situations the industry has seen in years. Iceberg, Romaine and Romaine hearts have all been under pressure for an extended stretch, with historically elevated markets lasting longer than normal.

Harvestable yields across the Salinas Valley continue to be impacted by soil-borne disease, INSV pressure and weather-related stress, which has reduced field productivity and kept carton availability below normal.

¡Yo Quiero! earns Good Housekeeping's Best Snack award for Black Bean Dip

June 17, 2026

¡Yo Quiero! announced that its Black Bean Dip has been named a winner in the 2026 Good Housekeeping Best Snack Awards under the Dips & Spreads category.

The annual awards from Good Housekeeping recognize standout snacks that deliver on taste, nutrition, convenience and innovation. This year, the Good Housekeeping Institute Nutrition Lab reviewed hundreds of snack options, evaluating ingredient lists, nutrition labels, packaging claims and flavor profiles. Real-life testers also weighed in on taste and overall snacking appeal, helping determine the final list of winners.
