Strong fall berry crop in the works for North Bay Produce

By

Chris Koger

July 17, 2026

An early harvest and favorable growing conditions for Michigan blueberries has North Bay Produce positioned to provide customers with fresh blueberries from the state throughout the season.

“The summer berry season is off to a strong start, with Michigan blueberries trending earlier than normal this year,” said Ryan Lockman, vice president of sales and procurement at Traverse City, MI-based North Bay. “Harvest began around June 25 in our southern growing regions, and we are seeing a good-quality crop with solid volume.”

Connecticut strengthens agriculture through investment, innovation and local food programs

By

Keith Loria

July 16, 2026

Connecticut's agricultural industry is building momentum in 2026 through a combination of strategic investments, expanded local food initiatives and consumer outreach designed to strengthen farms while increasing demand for Connecticut-grown products.

From funding farm expansion and succession planning to promoting seasonal crops and celebrating the state's agricultural heritage, the Connecticut Department of Agriculture has launched a series of initiatives this year that underscore its long-term commitment to the industry.
