In the Trenches: The unprofitable and senseless banana price mess

By

Ron Pelger

July 3, 2026

Isn't it time to end the 40-year banana price war?

Produce directors warn senior leadership that banana retails must increase because the fruit is being sold below cost, generating a negative gross profit. Executives refuse to act, choosing instead to absorb millions of dollars in losses.

This decision doesn't just cripple the company's bottom line — it undermines the very farmers whose livelihoods depend on receiving a fair return for the bananas they grow.

Holt celebrates 100 years while investing in the future of perishables

By

John Groh

July 3, 2026

As Holt marks its 100th anniversary in 2026, the family-owned business is celebrating a century of growth while making some of the largest investments in its history to strengthen the Delaware River's position as North America's premier gateway for fresh produce and refrigerated cargo.

Since 1926, when Leo Holt Sr. purchased a single truck, the business has grown over four generations into one of the nation's leading transportation, marine terminal and logistics providers.

IFPA's The Foodservice Conference redefines how the industry connects with new session format

July 3, 2026

The International Fresh Produce Association is replacing its traditional mainstage presentation with a new peer-led format to make connections across the foodservice produce supply chain. Taking place July 24 in Monterey, CA, the conference's new session, "Breakfast With Purpose: Real Conversations. Real Connections. Real Impact," will better reflect how foodservice business gets done.
